

Published based on Illusions: Adventures of a Reluctant Messiah

Illusions: Adventures of a Reluctant Messiah

One of my favorite quotes of all time comes from the wonderful book Illusions: Adventures of a Reluctant Messiah by Richard Bach.

Argue for your limitations, and sure enough they're yours.

Think about that. Could it be, really, that what we INSIST IS TRUE is then our reality?

If that is the case (which has been my experience), then why not INSIST UPON that which we want versus that which we don't want?

- Instead of insisting "we can't" - how about insisting not only "we can" but "it's done"...
- Instead of insisting on our excuses for staying small, we insist the universe bend to our will...
- Instead of playing the old childhood tapes of fear, ridicule and embarrassment - stand tall in your genius and share it with the world.

It's comforting, really. Because now you can just speak into existence exactly how you want the music of your life to play out.

Argue for your limitations, and sure enough they're yours.

Or you can argue for exactly what you want. And have it. All of it.

If you dare.